University Professor Removes Pancreas in 13-hour Surgery

An Arlington, California, man who has been in hospitals 55 times in the past five years hopes to return to work soon as the result of a 13-hour-and-7-minute operation performed by Jerrold K. Longerbeam, MD, associate professor of surgery in the School of Medicine.

Bryce (Chick) Averill is one of the few persons alive without a pancreas, which was removed in the operation April 2 at the Riverside County General Hospital. Also removed at that time was his spleen. Part of his gall bladder had been taken out earlier. Dr. Longerbeam is a specialist in pancreatic ailments.

Mr. Averill has worked but little since he first became ill with pancreas-titus in 1959. He was in the Riverside hospital 40 times, and has also been in many others, including the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota, and veterans' hospitals.

Thirty-five pints of blood were donated to Mr. Averill during his recent illness by employees of Cupples Division of Alcoa in Corona. He has expressed his appreciation to the employees and says the only person he knows at the Cupples plant is his wife, who works in the payroll department.

A former professional baseball player, boxer, public health service bacteriologist and barber, Mr. Averill hopes to return to public health work with Riverside County. He says he feels good for the first time in a long while.

Professor, Student Study Food Service In Mexican School

A graduate student in the University School of Nutrition and Dietetics and a faculty member recently returned from a trip to Mexico where they observed facilities and needs for a food service supervisors' workshop.

Providing transportation for the student, Marian A. Fedak, and Irma B. Vyhmeister, ND '59, associate professor of nutrition and dietetics, to Escuela Agrícola e Industrial del Pacifico in Navojoa, Sonora, was Mexico Pan-American League (Liga Mexico Pan-Americano Medico y Educacional, a league of University alumni and others who for years have been operating a medical and educational aid organization in Latin America).

Through the visit and conversation with teachers at the school, Miss Fedak gained an insight into problems confronting food service supervisors. A workshop planned by Miss Fedak will be conducted in Mexico later this year by Associate Professor Vyhmeister.

The need for such a workshop was pointed out some time ago by Mrs. Daniel W. Palmer, whose husband is director of the school in Navojoa. She requested that the School of Nutrition and Dietetics conduct the course.

Responsibility for planning the workshop was given Miss Fedak, who planned the program taking into account fac-

University crews were engaged in all-campus spruce up activities this and previous weeks, wrecking the old business building on the corner of Anderson and Central Streets, erecting another office building, painting the oldest building on campus and adding a touch of beauty to campus greenery.

Activities preceding commencement and groundbreaking ceremonies June 5 through June 7 stirred up everyday life on the campus where already excavators are cutting into the asphalt on Anderson Street to install huge water mains from a new water tank above Lawton Street and down Anderson, crossing the railroad tracks at Van Leuven.

In the periphery, area builders erect homes by the hundreds, adding a new skyline south of the medical center that will raise its landmark between Barton Road and Central Street in the year of 1967.

A few weeks ago, University crews tore up the 20-acre orange grove on which the medical center will be constructed. Excavation and foundation work will begin July 1 under a negotiated contract between Loma Linda University, the Del Webb Corporation, Phoenix, and Larry C. Havstad, local contractor.

A computer-planned construction schedule calls for completion of the medical center by March, 1967, with equipping and staffing of the various hospital services and educational and research facilities to be accomplished shortly thereafter.

The new office building is being erected at the University Hospital, on the parking lot toward Anderson Street, across from the Hill Church. A 30 x 60 structure built by Havstad and Bergvall, it will house clinical offices for University staff members. It will be occupied by July 1.

The old School of Nursing building adjacent to a complex in which the School of Physical Therapy and the Occupational Therapy Curriculum have their teaching facilities, has received a coat of paint, as have the two other buildings there.

Book Talk

By WAYNE FOX
PT'64

In his book REBELLION IN MISSOURI: 1861 (Chilton, 1961) Hans Christian Adamson brings to life a long-forgotten and neglected campaign and resurrects from the ashes of history an authentic American hero who might have rivaled U. S. Grant—Nathaniel Lyon.

The story of General Nathaniel Lyon and his Army of the West is a drama of stirring political-military intrigue breaking on the Western border in the spring of 1861. In ninety days, in spite of efforts by Governor Claiborne F. Jackson, a confederate sympathizer, Missouri was forever lost to the Confederacy.

Prior to the outbreak of hostilities, Missouri was a large slave-holding state with a government inclined to strong secessionist sympathies and specific plans to cooperate with the Confederacy. To fulfill these Governor Jackson had called on General Daniel Frost to assemble the State Militia at Camp Jackson in St. Louis.

Meanwhile in the pro-Union city of St. Louis, Lyon, a Unionist acting under unprecedented orders signed by President Abraham Lincoln and General Winfield Scott, with Congressman Frank P. Blair, Jr., acted to save the St. Louis arsenal from the Secessionists and to capture the militia encampment at Camp Jackson.

Scraping together a volunteer army, Lyon determined to take the war to the enemy and marched with his little corps into the heart of rebel Missouri, the far southwestern corner of the state. There, near Springfield, on August 10, 1861, he fought the Battle of Wilson's Creek and through his death on the battlefield became immortal.

Adamson tells of the events leading up to the battle and its effect upon the Confederacy in that state. He draws sharp portraits of the men who made history under two flags: Lyon, whose integrity was a legend in his own time; Frank Blair, who contributed substantially to the preservation of the Union; Major General John C. Fremont, the "Great Pathfinder," known to Lyon as a frustrating superior; John Schofield, Lyon's mustering officer; Brigadier General William S. Harney, who had been put to pasture in St. Louis from the Indian wars and who wanted to avoid trouble; Major General Sterling Price, who almost held Missouri for the South; Claiborne Jackson, governor and ardent supporter of slavery and states rights; and Brigadier General Daniel M. Frost, as staunch a rebel as the South itself produced.

One cannot read Adamson's moving story of the "Missouri Yankee" without feeling that Lyon as a national military hero would have been eminently qualified to seek his nation's highest office had not his life been so abruptly ended at the Battle of Wilson's Creek.

University Group Pilots Special Development Course

An instructor and her class of six students have launched a pilot self-development "interest-expansion course" for medical assistants at the University. The class met May 12 for the first time, Alice Kuhn, SN'42, directing the course.

The introductory course for secretaries and other medical office personnel meets weekly for discussion, demonstration, practice, field trips and other special features. The first evening was devoted to the discussion of general health facilities available for the care of the public, and background of medical office programs. The second evening was spent at the University library in preparation for reading connected with the course. The material was presented by Miss Irene Schmidt, associate librarian, Vernier Radcliffe Memorial Library.

Class members are helping to plan and evaluate the content for future courses. Selected class members, all University employees, are Nita Freeberg, Rae King, Kathy Ekkens, Jessie Griffin, June Anderson and Priscilla Park.

Anyone interested in the course should contact the instructor, Miss Kuhn, at 796-6791 or P.O. Box 87, or one of the students.

The present course, according to Miss Kuhn, is not preparing necessarily for medical office employment, as currently all members of the class are well employed. "Rather, the class is embarking on a venture in activities to broaden understanding and interest in this special area of study."

Dr. Neufeld Speaks In Wisconsin

John O. Neufeld, DMD, associate professor and chairman of the department of prosthodontics in the School of Dentistry, this week is in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he is presenting a paper before the Academy of Denture Prosthetics.

He is one of several prosthodontists invited to give papers before the group, which is limited to a membership of 50. Its members include many of the most eminent prosthodontists in the United States and Canada, says Dr. Neufeld.

All prospective members are required to present a paper before the Academy and to do research toward the improvement of dentistry before being accepted into membership. All those who have done so will be considered for admission when an opening occurs.

Dr. Neufeld's paper is entitled "Bone, the Living Denture Base." It discusses the inevitability of change under denture bases and what conditions influence these changes.

The world must learn to work together, or finally it will not work at all. —Dwight D. Eisenhower.

1960 — "Best Public Relations Program" in Riverside and San Bernardino counties during 1959 was the award presented to the College of Medical Evangelists Office of Development at the second annual awards banquet of the Twin Counties Press Club, composed of newspaper, radio and other media.

In giving the award, the Press Club spokesman noted that, "This program overwhelms the competition by sheer weight. It comprises bulletins, handbooks, directories, annual reports, news letters, employee publications, press clippings, alumni material and many other informational items. All these are of professional quality and highly adequate to the purpose."

An anonymous alumna of the School of Nursing recently donated $1000 to the undergraduate student scholarship fund of the School of Nursing Alumni Association.

The gift was reported by Bessie B. Wat, SN'40, president of the association, at a board meeting. Appreciation for the gift was expressed, with Maxine Atteberry, dean of the School of Nursing, speculating that if the scholarship fund grows sufficiently it should provide enough interest to aid each year in educating worthy students.

Bessie Falconer, treasurer of the alumni association, reported that the undergraduate fund now totals $1435.74.

There are many girls with high goals and potentials who need financial help, according to the association. Some of these will be chosen by the University scholarship committee in consultation with Dean Atteberry.

Also at the meeting, Jeanne Middleton, SN'30, associate professor of physical therapy, reported proceeds of $450, after expenses, from a recent rummage sale sponsored by the alumni association. The sponsorship fund, which is used for mission projects, was allotted $300 of the money. The other $150 went to the scholarship award fund, from which $100 is awarded each year for educational purposes to an outstanding student in the School of Nursing who plans to pursue her education for a higher degree.

Two former recipients of that award are now students in the Graduate School, Vaneta M. Condon, SN'60, and Lois M. Mangussen, SN'63.

Letters of appreciation were read from alumnae who have benefited from the sponsorship fund. Anne Lindt, SN'54, received a Sally Chase mannekin, which is used for demonstration purposes in the classroom. Mrs. Lindt teaches at South China Union College in Hong Kong.

Marjorie Whitney, SN'32, is using the $50 she received for a patients' waiting room in Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, West Indies, where she is stationed. Another $50 was sent to Luthea Estey Owens, SN'45, who is in Nigeria. It will be used to help buy barbed wire for a fence to protect fruit trees and the garden at the hospital there.

Anatomical models to be used as teaching aids were presented at the meeting by Olive N. Vaughan, GS. They will be sent to Mwami Hospital in Northern Rhodesia, Africa, where Miss Vaughan has been a missionary. She is now on furlough while pursuing graduate studies.

In closing alumni association members voted thanks and appreciation to Miss Wat for her "well-organized and efficient leadership." She will be replaced by the president-elect, Lorna Mae James, SN'50, at the June 4 homecoming banquet.
