Footpath of Service

To be glad because life gives us moments to fill with work and with kindness, and opportunities to express appreciation of earth's mysteries and beauties; to be not forgetful of our origin—our homes, our school, our church and the friends who have been responsible for our success; to give deference to our colleagues, courtesy to our helpers, heartfelt sympathy to those across whose lives is flung the veil of sorrow; to fear nothing but our own hesitation at difficulties and to loathe nothing but dishonesty and cowardice; to gain the respect of our teachers, the confidence of our patients, the approbation of our fellowmen; to retain our poise in the face of victory or of defeat; to remove the ill that grieves and place the balm of healing in its stead; to be ashamed to die until we have achieved some triumph for humanity, whether it be an improved therapy, a perfect experiment, or a rescued life; to guard the cradle, protect the workmart, hover tenderly near our human trusts even to the portals of the tomb; to be ever mindful that today, lived in service for the Great Physician, makes "every yesterday a dream of happiness and every tomorrow a vision of hope"—these are the little waymarks in our footpath of service.

—Joseph Mossberger.

The audience is requested to remain standing, following the benediction, until after the recessional.
